Nova Cook is a Nehiyaw (Cree) woman, with mixed settler heritage and the daughter of a Sixties Scoop survivor. Nova was not raised in her culture and spent most of her adult life deepening her connection to land, culture, and spirituality. She was born and grew up in BC, studied at Trent University and moved to Akwesasne in 1997 where she raised five children and is now a Kookum/Tota. Nova is passionate about reconciliation and cultural safety education and has worked extensively with Indigenous community programs, including MCA & NNATC, to reflect Nation specific history, contemporary realities, and build relationships that improve service delivery and outcomes for Indigenous communities.
